

POINTS · MILES · MISTAKE FARES

Business class isn't expensive. It's just priced for people who pay cash.

Two engines run side by side. Points and miles build the trip you plan on taking — the cabin you asked for, on dates you chose. Fare intelligence catches the pricing mistakes that surface without warning and close within hours. Most people run neither. Almost nobody runs both.

- No prior points required — the majority of a first trip comes from bonuses, not spend
- Works from any home airport, and positioning is part of the plan
- You keep control of your points; nothing transfers until a seat is confirmed
